

I would be honored to serve as a member of the International Neuroethics Society Board of Directors, and I believe I have a unique combination of leadership experience and scholarship that I could bring to the role. I am currently a member of the Nominating and Program Committees and the Diversity and Inclusion Task Force at the INS, a new Associate Editor of Neuroethics, and the Philosophy and History Category Leader for the American Society for Bioethics and Humanities. Previously, I have been the Director of Ethics at an academic medical center, a member of the IEEE Brain Neuroethics leadership group and of the TechEthics Ad Hoc Committee, the leader of the Neuroethics Affinity Group for the American Society for Bioethics and the Humanities, and a member of the Committee on Philosophy and Medicine for the American Philosophical Association. In these roles, I have developed a skill for working with others with an eye towards institutional progress. I am committed in my leadership and scholarship to expanding the boundaries and the impact of neuroethics, be it through amplifying diverse voices, engaging with underrepresented communities, or exercising intellectual humility by creating pathways for others to shine. With that being said, this year's slate of candidates for open positions at the INS is truly excellent, and I believe the INS will be well-directed with any of these scholars at the helm.
